PROFESSOR TOM PHOOLERY...

on American History

© 1982 WESTERN PUBLISHING COMPANY, INC.

Last month as a public service we gave you Professor Tom Phoolery, and our waste basket is piled high to the ceiling with student letters offering to give him back to us. A letter from one of the students said, "What has Professor Tom Phoolery got that you can not get at your nearest Mad House?" Another student writes, "When I first enrolled at school I was so nervous I used to carry an extra set of false fingernails to bite on. But since I joined Professor Phoolery's class, I now bring two extra sets!"

Professor Tom Phoolery's lecture today will touch on early American History. Once again, we give you Professor Tom Phoolery!

"Good morning, students. Forgive me for chewing on this leftover pizza one of my students left in his final exam paper, I hate to be wasteful!

"Now, today's topic is "How Chris Columbus discovered America." Very few people today realize Christopher Columbus was considered a beatnik by squares who lived in Seville. He spent most of his time in espresso shops writing third-rate poetry to Queen Isabella, trying to con her into lending him money. Finally Queen Isabella was convinced that he was some kind of a nut. Just to get rid of him, she gave Chris three beat-up landing barges, the Pinta, the Nina, and the Santa Maria, that had been rusting in the Royal Surplus Lot for a dozen years.

" 'Get lost!' Queen Isabella said when she saw Columbus off that day at the Royal Pier. The Spaniards laughed when the Queen added, 'Go discover America!' It was a local joke that was always good for a laugh since they knew there was no such place.

"Columbus spent the next thirty-four days trying to disengage his ship's anchor from a harbor lobster trap. When Chris finally got going, his crew was already fed up with the adventure, and the sailors were striking for more food, fifteen-minute coffee breaks and free sarsaparilla!

"But Chris ignored the angry crew and cried out, 'Sail on! Sail on . . . and on!' 'Oh, brave Admiral' one of his faithful sailors asked, 'where are we sailing to?' 'Who cares, as long as the Queen is paying us time and a half,' Columbus shouted.

"Everyone agreed that Columbus had a point and decided to continue the voyage if Chris would promise to cut them in on fringe benefits, like history book and motion picture royalties. Columbus agreed and the fleet sailed on and on until even the mice jumped ship because of the lack of food and free sarsaparilla.

"Finally, the sailors were so hungry they ate up their royalty contracts, saving the fine print for dessert. 'Let's turn this tub around and go back home!' the crew protested. Just then, Columbus looked up and saw a sea gull winging overhead, picking its teeth with a sprig of seaweed. The sea gull was on its way to Coney Island. It had just been cued that this was the day for filling the boardwalk peanut machines. 'That bird means land must be near!' Columbus shouted.

"A short while later, Chris Columbus shouted again. This time, 'Land! Ha! (Chris wanted to be original. He hated mariners who shouted 'Land ho!') The ship's cannon boomed, the shot barely missing the Statue of Liberty, and the crazy voyage was over. The crew cheered and sang songs.

"The Indians (the Cleve and Indians, that is) were waiting with baseball bats when the sailors finally came ashore. So Columbus and his men quickly called themselves Yankees and arranged with the Indians to start the very first World Series. And that's how Columbus discovered the New World, students . . . Class dismissed!"
